Mr Caldwell said the defence was that with regard to this $475 no settlement had been made. The settlement made by Fukeers had nothing to do with the 25 shares in question. With regard to the question of brokerage they relied on the agreement just produced in which the plaintiff stated that no brokerage would be charged unless the contracts were carried out and their contention was that even supposing any settlement had been made with Ho Tim, which they denied, such settlement was not within the spirit of the nire ement. A summer's evening, and the gates of Sung Were closed to traffic, and the tinkling bells Of burdened mules had slowly died away. And caratans with produce of the East. Were drawn saide, and many drivers sat In groups together and with social case Diseased all topics of more foreign parts, Related legends or, with dominous, Sought to retrieve their losses on the road. While listening to the songs and lore of those Who told weird stories when the toils of day Had ceased and all the joys of rest began.

An ancient man whose cabalistic art Had gained high reputation and respect, Crept from his ill-kept but, along the street, And in his wonted place sat down to mark The rising of the moon, which to him seemed Like unto some great mousrch of the sky A prophet by the world unrecognized, Who came to tell of things beyond that age, Revealing much to this decrepit slave Who, thus inspired, would sit for hours and hours By fancy led, and conjurg atrange events Which he wrote down. Until at length the moon Would steal away and leave him there slone.

Now Ui-ko was a young and comely youth, Possessed withal of affinonce and sense, Who at his uncle's house was then a guest In Surg, and on that evening went abroad To hear all news brought in by travellers From other cities many li a way. And while he paused near when a temple stood He saw this old man sitting on the steps And by the moonlight reading thoughtfully, And sometimes making entries in a book. So Ui-ko-like most youths of every clims, -Was curious to learn from this old man The why and wherefore of his being there. And what he found to road and write about, And why he sought no homeller studio. And for the purpose of divining this He went to him, interrogating thus-" I my aged father, seeing you engaged In lit'ry pursuits by this misty light, May I with all due def'rence to your years And to discretion in obedience plead "Of evening study and of writing by No other lamp than cheerless rays of light Shed on this earth by you ill-fated moon Which, like this world, has beened out long ago ' And being now devoid of lambent power Exposes all its nakedness and shame By turning from its cold inconstant light Towards that flushed and hest-consuming orb Which lures those wayward stars to its domain And borrows lustre from their fallen state."

The old man, from his thoughtful attitude, Did not at first bestir himself to speak Although to this intruder he gave ear. At length he slowly raised his shrivelled form And looked to Ui-ko while he answered thus-· Since you, my child, presume to question me On actions which by most are unremarked, And are to strangers of no interest, I now will place reliance in your wish And let you share the unexpected bliss Of learning what the will of fate decrees, And sorrowing, since you too eager be To prosecute my singularity. For 'tis not oft that casual visitors To this far city of commercial fame ' Pause to inquire my pleasure, which is lost ' To all unsanctioned students of the moon.

Let me explain what book I now peruse That you may learn its value to isspect-"This is a record of betrothal which Concerns all people who, beneath the vault "Of yonder heaven, breathe and know of life And their engagements chronicled by me Will be fulfilled at the appointed time. · Though years may intervene and seas divide, " And many attanger planets rise and fall. And in my pockets I have cords of red With which I tie the feet of those who shall Be joined together. And when once they're bound, E'en should they be of families opposed Or nations adverse as the unknown spheroe "Of Life and Death, no human power can change to mak him to cancel the contract for the lifty "Their decting, which bears the seal of face.

"Fresh gathered herbs to poorer class of folk, "And she has now an infant which will be. In years to come, your fond and faithful wife. 14 Bo go to her, and treat the woman well For she is poor and has upon her breast What most to you is preblous, and the babe Will prosper where she is. Bo do not try To better her position, for the wall That she remains in this quiet lowly state... Until such time as heaven may unfold Ramjahn's. He afterwards said he would look "To you her charms in all their maiden bloom-That you may test their priceless chastity."

> When Ul-Ko heard his future thus fore told He turned away and walked towards the house Where he was staying. And was much perplexed By these strange revelations which, to him, Beemed to predict diagraceful poverty. Or else why should be be compelled to choose A fitting wife from such a lowly grade ? Bo he was corely troubled, and he went Next day to see this woman and the child. And when he saw them he draw back and said Cursed be the fate which that old detard plans For me through this old harridan who veids Her renoid herbs to any starveling, And rears this squalld child, amidst the din Of oaths, and notsome airs that damn this place. ' To be my vestal bride eventually. O may I be convulsed in agonies Of death and torture rather than become A victim to this freak of desting."

At last in desperation and disgust He felt determined to frustrate the scheme, And from this trouble be at once released. By hiring some assauln to go there And bring about the graceless child's demise-And as he passed along a narrow ettest A poor emsciated leper came And begged for enocour that he might exist Although in torture, not by hunger gnawed For life will fight in unsound armour long And hold its own through feenlence and age Unless besieged and driven out at last. By cold starvation, through the gate of death. And Ui-Ko faltered as he slowly said. Are you a man who dares to gain a prize By making a bold stroke that carries death To one who will grow up to be a curse And bring dishonour to the family Of her afflicted husband who will be Snared into marriage by some witchery !"

Lam!" replied the loper, " and I will Do anything to ease my poverty. For faith, 'tie bad when nibbled by disease To have no food nor where to lay and die."

'Then go !" said Ui-Ko, pointing to the place, And if to night you do remove from earth. *That w. man's child which now rests on her knee 'I will reward you with ten thousand cash. But be not eruel, perform your errand well, And ther return to claim your welcome prize."

And in the silence of the night they met And Ut Ko heard the child had breathed her last Then with misgivings Ui-Ko went away, A man dishonoured and a slave to crime But never did he go avain to see The ancient city of his infamy.

PART 9. A quiet old home brueath the friendly shade Of ever swaying foliage that the breath Of dulcet breezes moved to cadence sweet, Looked out upon a clear deep stream that kissed The yellow steps which mounted to a door Where cobblestones, wo n down by many feet Led through, soross a well-trod rustic yard, Towards a chamber where grim efficiet-Strange senile figures of the pagen gods-Sat in prevailing gloom, while hurning splints Shed a grave light, emitting balmy fumes Of sandalwood and garoo, which wrought up In ornate fancies that, awaking, seemed To sanctify the silence of that place.

Upon the right a curtained entrance led Into a smaller room, where frescoed walls, Hong with quaint etchings and with impestry, Attracted sunbeams through the window, where Fantastic outlines painted on the sheet. Cast motley shadows on the inlaid floor And upwards to the ceiling, where was traced Huge dragous and chameleons yaping down Upon a marble table, where there ast An old man elected in plain and homely atyle, Whose long white beard bespone of life advanced To quiet retirement from the toils of life. His sallow face with cheeks long furrowed out, And eyes illumined by the light of age, Seemed all in keeping with his dull attire Which blonded well with that sedative neok.

Upon the left a carred and panelled door Gave entrance to a next apartment, where Three lattice windows, shaded by green trees, Inhaled awest perfumes of the fruitful land From gentle breezes as they recred and fell To lighter airs that o'er the waters played, Or sought the shore and there among the trees Conversed in whispers, or in voices soft, Sang through the hours of darkness and repose Seraphic songs untitled by this world.

And in this room a fair and resthin girl. Whose blushing honours cart a halo round Her stateliness and beauty which was such That any man would honour and respect, Reglined amidst the soushing of her home. The prefect, her adopted father, gave To her all comfort he could well command; And, in return, she proved most worthy of -His just affection, and his every wish She studied with a womanly resolve To make the days of ago pass cheefully And close beneath the shadow of her love.

One day the old man called her and he said :

Luh-hwa, I have been thinking of you much.

' And of your future, which concerns me more

Than I have cared to mention until now; For, as you know, I've watched you faithfully And fondly through the years of infancy And know full well you do reciprocate The love that prompts me early to provide For your welfare, since heaven has bestowed On me the blessing of prosperity, Andyou, my shild, the modesty and grace Which so refines kind Nature's recet art And thus completes a master-piece of life, That I may now, with all paternal pride, " Prove faithful and unselfish at the last " By leading you to a straightforward man "Who best will guide you thru' the future years When I shall be laid by among the rest of my ancestors on the Western hills-And with regret, yet pleasure, I have planned 'Your marriage with my good friend's only son "On whom I place much confidence and faith, "Since I have marked his actions carefully And judged his worthinger impartially. "So not one measure has been left anweighed " And with integrity I now conclude "That Ui-Ko is a loyal and honest man, Who has seen life but sees his felly now. And as he is most anxious to secure "Your hand and beart by early naptials I have most favourably considered this And have consulted all the wisest men : And they who have pursued the omens for "Instruct me that the branches of the earths' And stems of heaven inciente the chark ". As a propitious time for you to wed. " So as 'Ha now the time of bearded grain " In sixteen days the Sammer Soletice comes, "Then you shall see your lover and go forth, With my fond blessing, to adorn his home.

And Ul-Ko married Lah-hws, and he saw That she was rere in beauty and in mind And was imbned with loving constancy; But strange to say his fair one always wore. Upon her brow an artificial flower. Which looked uncommon, and her husband asked Repeatedly her reason for the choice

Of this adornment worn unfact which But she was most exactve and did keep. The secret of her plume religiously At length, however, she unveiled the troin; And proceeding alply to her husband's side the laid her gruceful head squinch his arm, And seemed to neatle there confidingly And for ily as she looked to him and said; Forgive me, Ui-Ko, for I have concealed-" From you, my husband, that which might erase " My beauty and your love, for now behold " It hides a soar and shades my early life. ... But confidence is most essential now That we are made, by beaven, man and wife.

I am the daughter of a mandarin Who held high office in the Teotal's court In Bung, full fourteen years ago and more And I was but an infant in these days. "And as my mother died when I was born " A faithful nurse sometimes attended me When father was engaged efficially. This nurse was poor and she, kind woman, kept-A little shop close to the Northern Gate Where she would often take me. And one nigh When I was citting on her knee outside, A robber struck me and the sour remains Imprinted yet beneath this floral seel. My father died when I was two years old And his good brother then adopted me And brought me over to a happy home 'In B'ong Ch'u, where I ever since remained, And so I'm oailed the Prefect's daughter now

When Ui-Ko heard his wife marrate these facts He for a moment stood in wonderment. Then with a ory of joy he drew her near And, with emotion, spoke impressively : "My loved one, by the Gods, this foral seal "Conveys a message from the realms of fate, Demanding just repentance for the hart "I caused you, for twee I who wished you deed. " For some strange wirard had predicted this, "That we should marry. But your childleh face, Impaired by the ill-favoured phase of life " In which it seemed apparent you were born, Was no criterion of your beauty now; " Ner of your virtue, for indeed that place Was most unwholeseme and the people low. And I, in apprehension of my fate, Defied the just decrees that are fulfilled. " For clouds, impending, darkened as they reache The fancied horrors of futurity-And I determined to remove from earth The settled cause of swiftly gathering shame. 'And then I hired a villain to remove You from my path of pictured happiness ; But now, thank heaven, it was not performed. " So, Luh-hwa, let us close the book of Pant, " For this has proved a floral seal of fate "The b gut rds our low, through life-eternally."

An unempossful doctor has been bewalling profeedousl fallure in the columns of a contemporary He attributes it principally to the lack of a bald head. This, combined with a "good bedside manner," should be worth at least five hundred a year to a medical man. There is a good deal of serious truth in that. Baldness unquestionably inspires confidence, especially among the ladies. And when the ladies once pronounce a doctor "very clever" his fortune is as good as made.

The Eiffel Tower has paid the cost of its construction. An official notice has been issued. informing the shareholders of the Eiffel Tower Company that they can claim repayment of the last fifth of the capital invested by them in the undertaking. The fortunate possessors of the securities will, however, continue to receive dividends. The concession of the tower is for 20 years, after which time it becomes the pro perty of the City of Paris.

A Vienus correspondent states that one of the largest bridges the world has ever seen is about to be constructed by the Roumanian Government scross the Dannbe, between Dudesci and Tehernavoda, thus effecting a junction between Hustenoge Harbour and the Western Railway of Roumania, which already runs as far as Dudesci. As there is a large tract of marshy ground on the left bank of the Danube where the bridge will be built, this will have to be no less than twenty miles in length.

The friend awoke, and ran out and shot the tiger, who dropped the hand, but was able to rush after the two men as they flew to the house. He knocked Mr B. over as he resched the door, and fell dead himself as

> The Violle standard of light which has been adopted universally for physical measurements, has not been much used in practical operations, such as testing the candle-power of lamps. This is owing to a certain difficulty in realising it. Evidently it must require a special apparatus of precision to give effect to the standard, which is the light emitted from a square centimetre of melted platinum at the moment of its solidification. A practical means of producing it has, however, now been devised. Dr Werner Siemens introduced one a few years ago, in which a square centimetre of platinum foil was heated to the melting point by an electric current; but this plan is discarded in the new apparatus of M. Carpentier. The light is simply produced by besting the platinum in a small crucible of chair, and the light given out by its glowing surface is caught upon a screen for comparison with other lights in the ordinary way. The orudble is heated by gas jets burning oxygen.
